Editor's Note: This article was completed as an assignment for a class in the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications.

Getting married as a college student, however, is not as uncommon as some may think. According to the most recent numbers on the Non-Traditional and Veteran Student Services website, there were 272 K-State undergraduate students under the age of 25 who were married as of the spring of 2007.

"I wanted to marry him from the beginning," Tanner

Citing environmental benefits, job creation and energy independence, the Kansas House of Representatives and Kansas Senate adopted a concurrent resolution in 2009 in support of the Environmental Protection Agency's quest to approve higher blends of ethanol in gasoline. However, questions remain.

Do research before joining a cause, bandwagons dangerous

It doesn't take much for something to go viral. Remember "Numa Numa," that video of Hitler discovering that the University of Kansas had lost to the University of Northern Iowa in the 2010 NCAA Tournament or Ecokat? All it takes is a single clever, humorous or novel idea and boom — people are jumping on the bandwagon, posting it on their Facebook pages and Twitter feeds.

Within a day's time, a viral idea can make its way into all the nooks and crannies of the Internet. Before long, people everywhere are talking about this single idea - the good, bad and indifferent. Last week, a 30-minute video produced by the nonprofit Invisible Children began enjoying this kind of attention.

The KONY 2012 documentary is a call to action aimed at raising awareness about Joseph Kony, the leader of the Lord's Resistance Army in Uganda, with the ultimate goal of capturing him so he can be tried in the International Criminal Court, according to Invisible Children's website.

The KONY 2012 campaign has been erupting on my Twitter and Facebook feeds since last Wednesday. As the video points out, we live in a day and age where everything is instantaneous and information can spread widely in a matter of minutes.

When I first saw it, honestly, I ignored it. Looking at the link didn't tell me anything about what it was promoting and I didn't feel like delving in. It wasn't until both of my younger sisters tweeted about it that I felt the need to check it out for myself. I watched the video and thought it had an interesting concept, but I still needed to do some research on my own before solidifying an opinion.

What I discovered is Invisible Children has been called to the carpet by critics for only using between 30-40 percent of their income to fund direct services in Africa, with much of the rest going to staff salaries, travel costs and other various organizational operations.

This is highly atypical for a nonprofit agency. Additionally, according to the Better Business Bureau's website, Invisible Children has not provided the BBB's Wise Giving Alliance information to determine if the charity meets its seal of approval.

Invisible Children responded with a blog post containing an infographic that breaks down their finances. They also provide a link to their financial statements from the last five years.

"We are committed, and always have been, to be 100 percent financially transparent and to communicate in plain language the mission of the organization so that everyone can make an informed decision about whether they want to support our strategy," the group claims in the blog post.

If that's the case, why not provide the BBB with the documents they request? It can only help their case.

Finances aside, there is a huge discussion taking place on reddit.com about the documentary and its legitimacy, ranging from the topic of bandwagons to critiques of the charity and Ugandan politics, and some interesting points are being raised on both sides of the coin.

In doing my research I found a well-done piece about KONY 2012 on mashable.com, a site dedicated to social media and Internet news. The March 8 article by Zoe Fox neutrally presents information about Invisible Children's campaign and its critics and allowed me to come to my own conclusion.

I posted the piece to my Facebook page because it seemed to be a good collection of information about the campaign and I wanted my friends to be well-informed. Within an hour, a friend of mine posted Invisible Children's blog post addressing the critics; this very blog post happened to be mentioned and linked in the article I posted. It made me wonder if he even read mine.

I see people on both sides of this argument being downright mean to each other. Those supporting Invisible Children really care about their cause and feel the need to defend it. I get it, but I hope they have done their homework and truly agree with their cause.

I'm not saying do or do not support the KONY 2012 campaign. However, blindly jumping on a bandwagon is dangerous. This applies to more than just KONY 2012. Look into where your money goes when you buy a "Save the boobies" T-shirt, and ask questions when someone wants you to donate to a charity. Know exactly what you are supporting and where your money is going before donating. Keep in mind that raising awareness is only the first step and not the solution.

We have a saying in Kedzie Hall that I'd like to share: "If your mother says she loves you, you better check it out."

TO THE POINT

Pros, cons of marriage while still in college

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

College is a time in a person's life that many different things happen. A few of those things are: learning new things, making new friends, discovering your passions, making mistakes and, in some people's cases, getting married.

The Collegian editorial board believes that every couple's relationship is different. Something that works for one relationship does not mean that it will work for another.

It is common for couples to get engaged during college, but getting married while in college could bring unwanted challenges.

Planning a traditional wedding takes ample amounts of time. Many hard and timely decisions have to be made which can be stressful, especially while studying in college.

Life after college could bring dramatic changes that might change certain views or feelings you have. It is important to be aware of this challenge and keep it in consideration if you are engaged or married.

We believe that it is less stressful and better to wait to get married until after graduation. But if you do decide to get married while still in college, we believe it is essential to discuss goals and expectations to make sure to keep your education a priority.

Every relationship is at a different maturity level, so marriage could be the next step in your relationship, it could be way down the road or you may be in a committed relationship that does not lead to marriage.

The aspect of having a committed spouse that will always be there for you is an amazing thing and having that support system could be beneficial.

There are also financial benefits to getting married while in college, especially if your spouse is in the military. But the Collegian believes that couples should get married primarily because of love and not financial benefits.

There is no need to rush into marriage because of graduation or peer pressure. Marriage is an important and extraordinary thing that should be taken into careful consideration, whether you are a college student or not.

Proposed Arizona texting bill unnecessary, last resort

Earlier this semester, I wrote an opinion piece about when it was acceptable for children to receive cellphones. I decided that a good time to begin bestowing that freedom and privilege is around the early teen years.

Today, my focus is turning away from the age at which children should have cellphones to their right to keep what happens in their phone private. Deciding on the right time to give a cellphone is good parenting. Reading through everything your child does with his or her cellphone is oppressive, demeaning and shouldn't be justifiable by law.

In Arizona, a senator recently proposed such a law. According to a Feb. 26 article by Alia Beard Rau from The Republic, this bill would essentially allow parents to gain access to their children's text messages, although the phone company must "get consent from the minor child before complying with a parent's request to assure they remain in compliance with federal law."

Basically, a parent could retrieve logs of every message sent and received by their child's phone. Some phone companies would offer this for free, while others would provide a charge for the service.

Obviously, this bill is not supported by ill intentions. Of course parents want safety for their child, and in a world of peer pressure and potential danger in revealing secret information, parents cannot always be sure that their children are telling the truth about their social lives. Safety and protection are the values being upheld here, and I can respect that. It seems that supporters of this bill are ignoring the powers already granted to them, though.

According to the article from The Republic, all major phone service providers have parental controls available. Parents have the ability to block or limit texting on their child's phone, and some companies even reveal the phone numbers of people who are texting minors to the children's parents. Parents are certainly not helpless in this fight.

Another popular argument in this debate is that, because many parents pay the bill for their child's phone, they are entitled access to whatever their child does with it. This idea is technically correct, but only if the child knew up front that he or she would be subject to phone checks. I know that if my father told me that he was buying me a cellphone for the purpose of looking into my private life whenever he wanted, I wouldn't take the offer.

Privacy, like many other rights that are unquestionably granted to adults, seems to be stepped on when it comes to kids. What is it about not being 18 that makes it acceptable for parents to go through their child's phone? As a parent, being involved in your child's life is what counts. If you're doing that, then information will come to you and you won't have to covertly steal it from your kid.

In Arizona, many parents are challenging the bill because they already have access to their child's information — by talking to them. The Republic article notes that some children who have been informed about the bill have even said that they wouldn't mind if their phone was checked. Government interference on this topic is unnecessary and just causes controversy.

Everyone is different, and so every parent has a different style of parenting. I don't mean to criticize anyone's beliefs, and I know that many diverse parenting styles have yielded great human beings who respect where they come from. What all parents must be careful of, however, is what they end up resorting to. Deciding to take your child's phone away if he refuses to give you access to it is a parent's choice. Taking the information from his phone is a desperate resort.

The bill in Arizona is currently awaiting a vote from the state Senate before it goes to the governor. I truly hope that the bill is vetoed, because if the idea spreads into more states, we'll have yet another petty, solvable distraction to take us away from the problems that we really should be trying to fix in this nation.

BASEBALL | Offense benefits from key hitters

The Wildcat offense has benefited from having two of the best hitters so far in the Big 12, sophomore center fielder Jared King and senior first baseman Wade Hinkle. King reigns supreme in batting average and hits per game, hitting .491 and averaging 2.0 hits per game. He is also second in three other categories, including on-base percentage, where he trails Hinkle’s 580 mark by 42 points. Hinkle, who has reached base in every game this season, is third in the Big 12 with a .429 batting average. He has drawn a team-leading 15 walks already this season after only drawing 11 in 43 games played last season.

First pitch for game one is scheduled for 6:35 p.m. today, and Wednesday’s game will start at 3:05 p.m. Both games can be heard in the Manhattan area on KMAN-AM 1350 or online at either kstatesports.com or 1350kman.com.

K-State baseball players make a play against Pacific during their game on March 2.

WBB | Game Saturday

With the tough pre-Big 12 season game schedule K-State played, and with their finishing tied for No. 4 in the Big 12, Patterson said she is surprised with where her team fared in the brackets as well.

The Big 12 played their new double-round-robin schedule this year, so every team played the returning national champions [Texas A&M] and the sole remaining undefeated team in the nation [Baylor] twice, and Patterson said that ought to count for something.

“When you finish top 20 in strength of schedule, and I believe we were also in RPI, it makes you scratch your head and say, ‘well, let me make things a little easier for us next year because what we did this year didn’t get us what we’d hoped for anyways,’” Patterson said. “So if the best you can do with those kind of numbers is an eight seed, and [we] finished fourth in the No. 1 conference in America, what else can you do? Welcome to NCAA women’s basketball.”

Patterson said the team had a very positive practice on Monday and is looking forward to a strong appearance in the game.

The game will take place on Saturday, March 17 at 10:20 a.m. and will be shown live on ESPN2 and streamed live on ESPN3.com.

STATE | JCN concludes season with 25-1 record

Ahearn Field House. “I’m very happy for them,” said Tonya of the team and her daughters winning a state championship. “They get to experience what I experienced, and it’s something that they’ll always remember. They’ll always remember winning state. I don’t think it’s really sunk in yet. I’ve always talked to them about it. For me, as a mom, all the hard work they put in playing in the backyard has paid off. It’s great for them and for the community.”

Senior Mary Kern knocked down a jumper and Jacee Kramer followed with a 3-pointer and a basket inside to put JCN up 7-0 less than halfway through the first quarter.

“We wanted to get on them early,” Noll said. “It’s nice that Mary was involved in it because they were backed off of her. That shot made them come up and guard her, so that was great.”

The Chargers stretched the lead out in the second quarter as Jacee Kramer continued to fire away on the Eagles’ defense as she scored 11 points in the first half. JCN connected on five 3-pointers in the half and took a 26-15 lead into halftime.

JCN came out in the third quarter determined to put an end to Olpe’s 77-game winning streak.

Senior Kate Brickell began to heat up from the beyond the arc as she knocked down three 3-pointers in the quarter to help extend the Charger lead out to 42-28.

Brickell has received interest from several colleges, including Sterling College, Coffeyville Community College and Highland Community College.

Olpe cut the lead to 10 in the fourth quarter but was forced to foul JCN in an attempt to get back into the game. However, the Chargers hit their free throws to close out the game. Jordan Kramer went 7-of-8 from the line in the quarter.

With the win, JCN finishes the season with a 25-1 record.

The future looks bright for JCN, which will return several key players from this state championship team.

“We’ve got some young kids that are probably going to be ready to jump in and some kids coming back,” Tonya said. “We’ve got to keep building from here. It’s not just one state championship. We want to win more.”
